The LivingDead is the story of a psychotic coffin-maker whose ancestors, for many generations, made coffins for kings and the powerful. He wrestles with his demons and saints to make sense of his experiences as he deals with death every day. Fairy tales, myths, dreams, and his stream of thoughts combine to create a bizarre world where the living,

The dead, and the LivingDead naturally exist ad communicate across space and time. Some of the denizens in his magical world are the old man who comes riding on the wind, a parrot telling fairy tales, the great ancestor who steps out of his large portrait, a jinxed miniature ivory coffin with a mirror inside, and his twin brother who visits him even after his plane crashes into the Pacific Ocean. The LivingDead forces us to think about life and death from new perspectives.

universe. In his stream of consciousness, fairy tales, myths, and dreams create a kaleidoscopic fluid world where the living, the dead, and the LivingDead exist and relate across space and time. Some dwellers of his mythical world are the old man who comes riding the wind, a parrot that tells fairy tales, his great grandfather who steps out of his huge portrait, a hexed miniature ivory coffin with a mirror inside that reveals the future, and his identical twin brother who returns after his plane crashes into the Pacific Ocean. The LivingDead's unique perspectives force the readers to rethink life, death, and many beliefs.

Folklore has been a phenomenon based on nostalgic and autochthonous nuances conveyed with a story-telling technique with a penchant for over-playing and nationalistic pomp and circumstance, often with significant consequences for societal, poetic, and cultural areas. These papers highlight challenges that have an outreaching relationship to the regional, rhetorical, and trans-rhetorical devices and manners in Kurdish folklore, which subscribes to an ironic sense of hope all the while issuing an appeal for a largely unaccomplished nationhood, simultaneously insisting on a linguistic solidarity. In a folkloric literature that has an overarching theory of poetics – perhaps even trans-figurative cognitive poetics due to the multi-faceted nature of its application and the complexity of its linguistic structure – the relationship of man (and less frequently woman) with others takes center stage in many of the folkloric creations. Arts are not figurative representations of the real in the Kurdish world; they are the real.

Apuleius' tale of Cupid and Psyche has been popular since it was first written in the second century CE as part of his Latin novel Metamorphoses. Often treated as a standalone text, Cupid and Psyche has given rise to treatments in the last 400 years as diverse as plays, masques, operas, poems, paintings and novels, with a range of diverse approaches to the text. Apuleius' story of the love between the mortal princess Psyche (or "Soul") and the god of Love has fascinated recipients as varied as Romantic poets, psychoanalysts, children's books authors, neo-Platonist philosophers and Disney film producers. These readers themselves produced their own responses to and versions of

The story. This volume is the first broad consideration of the reception of C&P in Europe since 1600 and an adventurous interdisciplinary undertaking. It is the first study to focus primarily on material in English, though it also ranges widely across literary genres in Italian, French and German, encompassing poetry, drama and opera as well as prose fiction and art history, studied by an international team of established and young scholars. Detailed studies of single works and of whole genres make this book relevant for students of Classics, English, Art History, opera and modern film.
