He has two chief criteria: first, that a work should be daringly, challengingly innovative, should act on the "lure of heresy" in his title; and second, on Freudian lines, that it should show "a...

Review: Modernism by Peter Gay | Books | The Guardian

While the subtitle of the book, "The Lure of Heresy," might give the idea that it is the latter, it is very much the former. For example, Gay opens up the section on Painting and Sculpture with a survey of self-portraiture by Modernist painters, which very much dwells in what I would say is Gay's central idea: that Modernism was a turning in by ...
